The Russians are not an inventive people. This is the rule: now for the inevitable exception. The mayor of a small provincial town in the Government of Moghilev proposed that the streets should be henceforth illuminated after dark by kerosene, but met with strong opposition from the members of the municipal council. Nothing daunted, he had the scheme drawn up on paper, and a day fixed for a final vote on the burning question. The exact time of day he chose was 11:45, quarter of an hour before dinner. The twenty councillors were punctual, but the mayor came late—in fact, not till he had dined. The urn was placed on the table, and the actuary sent for the black and white voting balls. They were mislaid, and an hour was spent in searching for them unsuccessfully. Meanwhile the municipal body was suffering the pangs of hunger. As the balls were not forthcoming, the mayor sent the town clerk for twenty baked and twenty-one raw potatoes, as substitutes. The baking occupied another hour. The mayor then informed his famished hearers that each raw potato found in the urn would be a vote in favour of his scheme, and each baked one a hostile vote. Whereupon he calmly and deliberately began to read the measure, twelve folio pages. At four he concluded, and the poll took place at once. The urn contained seventeen raw potatoes—not a single baked one—and the streets of Stomakekoff are now lighted at night.

The Bridgeton (Me) News calmly says; The types last week made us say that "the showers were not sufficient to meet the wants of milkmen, etc.", instead of millmen.

When an editor refers to a man as "a miserable polecat" and is promptly accused of gross flattery it looks rather dubious for the person referred to.—Boston Post.

Shocking effect of the Fenayrou trial.—A dialogue overheard in Paris: The wife (seductively)—"Darling, would not you kill any one to have me all to yourself?" The husband (catching at the suggestion)—"Oh, yes, sweetest—your mother."

Fifty tons of sulphuric acid have lately been produced by the New Zealand Drug Company on White Island, an active volcano.

In England a physician was actually "taken to do" by his "regular" brethren for having his name printed on his trunk with "M. D." affixed to it. They said it was advertising.

Never lend your Ivy plant, because you cannot get an IV green back.—Boston Commercial Bulletin

The crews of schooners find it possible "for a man to serve two masters."—Pittsburg Telegraph.
